

CALLING ALL SELF-DIAGNOSED AUTISTIC FEMALE CURRENT OR EX-UNIVERSITY STUDENTS!

- Are you a self-diagnosed autistic current university student?
 - Or were you self-diagnosed autistic while previously studying at university?
 - Did you go to university in the UK?

You are invited to participate in a University of Bristol MSc research study exploring self-diagnosed autistic females' experiences of accessing support whilst at university.

This study will add to current research aimed at making universities a more accessible and inclusive place for autistic individuals. It focuses specifically on women, due to the bias within past autism research which favoured males. Because many seeking an autism assessment are faced with long waiting lists, this study intends to focus specifically on students who do not have a formal diagnosis.

Would you be willing to participate in a semi-structured interview to discuss your experiences?

You can choose the participation method you feel most comfortable (e.g. interviews can be in-person, over teams/zoom, on voice call or over text or email).

The interview will last no longer than 1 hour...

If you are interested in participating, please email the researcher [Keryn] at hl20158@bristol.ac.uk
